The destination

From the immense snow-clad Himalayas to the buzzing metropolises of Delhi and Mumbai to the palm-lined beaches of Goa, India is a land of contrasts. With six major religions, dozens of major languages, and numerous racial and ethnic groups, it would seem that India is more like several distinct countries instead of the second most populous nation in the world. Its vastness defies easy categorization, but one thing is for sure: India is an experience like no other. Volunteers in India immerse themselves in the culture of this vibrant country, working side by side with local community members to help them build a stronger future for themselves and their country. Participants volunteering in India will live and work in Jaipur, Salcete, or Palampur. Volunteers may take advantage of India's affordable and efficient train system to explore other parts of India on the weekends. The opportunities to experience new and exciting things are endless in India.

Projects

Teaching & Childcare

Teaching & Childcare volunteers have a direct impact on their host communities by interacting daily with local students and educators. Whether they work with primary students, secondary students, or adults, teaching volunteers contribute their enthusiasm and skills to address some of the most pressing needs of their host communities.

Those who volunteer with childcare and orphanage assistance serve as role models for underprivileged children in communities around the world. The children that volunteers work with may be orphans, children whose parents are unable to care for them, or participants in day tutoring and care programs for low-income children

Volunteers can be involved in:

- › Assisting teachers in the classroom
- › Writing lesson plans
- › Teaching lessons and classes
- › Leading after-school activities
- › Assisting Staff with cleaning, meal preparation, and laundry

Community Development and Women's Development

Community Development programs connect volunteers with the most pressing needs of their host communities.

Many volunteers provide job skills training for the unemployed or teach subjects like computer skills and English, while others assist with community assistance programs like soup kitchens and shelters.

Some volunteers also work on improving community infrastructure. Often, volunteers connect with local organizations that work to support marginalized groups and promote social justice.

Many volunteer programs are dedicated to women's development. Volunteers work with women's groups, local organizations that primarily serve the local female population, and social work agencies who assist women and families to empower women and support their efforts in recovery, education, and/or economic independence.

Volunteering in the field of women's development is a unique way to form close connections with community members, while providing help and friendship to women in difficult situations. In addition to their valuable contributions at project sites, volunteers learn about the challenges that women face around the world and bring this knowledge home with them, shedding light on an important issue and learning how to create needed change.

Volunteers can be involved in:

- › Helping women recover from exploitation and abuse
- › Teaching job skills at a women's development cooperative
- › Helping women who are suffering the effects of alcoholism, poverty, depression
- › Assisting with meal preparation at shelters

Health Education & Healthcare

Volunteer projects in health education & Healthcare promote public health initiatives around the world and aim to support health clinics and hospitals in communities that lack access to adequate healthcare. Health education volunteers partner with local nonprofits, government agencies, or healthcare providers to help community members become active agents in pursuit of their own health and the health of their families. Volunteers provide support and services, including record-keeping, helping patients to and from procedures, making beds, sanitation, and helping to keep long-term pediatric patients occupied and active. Whether raising awareness about preventing diseases like malaria and AIDS, providing education outreach about drug use, volunteers who choose a health education project through World Endeavors make a direct and lasting impact on the lives of the populations they serve.

Sustainable Agriculture & Environmental Conservation

Volunteer projects pair volunteers with farmers, cooperatives, and communities who practice environmentally-friendly farming methods. Volunteers are involved in several tasks ranging from assisting on farms with the care and harvesting of crops to helping at local cooperatives with the preparation of the final product to be taken to market. Volunteers not only help support the local economy, but, most importantly, the livelihoods of the people who depend upon it.

Environmental Conservation volunteer programs match participants with local organizations that support biodiversity and the preservation of natural resources. These projects can include both hands-on conservation work and community outreach. Past volunteers working on environmental conservation projects have planted trees with local community members to prevent erosion, built trails and made signs for national parks, supported community recycling efforts, and assisted with research projects that aim to protect and preserve the local environment.

Wildlife Conservation

Participants in wildlife conservation programs do hands-on work that leaves a lasting impact on wildlife communities in need. Assisting with challenges that have no simple solutions, volunteers learn about persisting in the face of difficulties and contributing their efforts toward creating needed, broad-reaching change. After their time volunteering, participants bring home an expanded awareness of important issues and help shed light on the situations of delicate environments worldwide.

Volunteers can be involved in:

- › Feeding animals at wildlife preservations
- › Providing care for wildlife populations
- › Building habitats for the wildlife
- › Assisting with outreach and education activities
- › Assisting with outreach and education activities
- › These programs may have a small supplemental cost associated with them.

Sport Coaching

Sport Coaching volunteers will have the opportunity to choose from a few different options. One option is working with underprivileged schools and their sports programs. You will work with kids from lower economic status or rural areas, teaching them different sports that you enjoy. There are no physical education classes at these lower income schools, so help in these areas is very needed and appreciated! Another option is to work with sports schools and academies. You will work with kids on the sports that you know, and also have the opportunity to learn about India's most popular sport, Cricket, as well as football
